Desiring The Kingdom Cultural Liturgies

A Philosophical Theology of Culture Philosopher James K. A. Smith reshapes the very project of Christian education in Desiring the Kingdom. The first of three volumes that will ultimately provide a comprehensive theology of culture, Desiring the Kingdom focuses education around the themes of liturgy, formation, and desire. Smith's ultimate purpose is to re-vision Christian education as a formative process that redirects our desire toward God's kingdom and its vision of flourishing.

Overview Desiring the Kingdom focuses education around the themes of liturgy, formation, and desire. The author contends—as did Augustine—that human beings are "desiring agents"; in other words, we are what we love. Postmodern culture, far from being "secular," is saturated with liturgy, but in places such as malls, stadiums, and universities.

Liturgical Folk as a concept is all about bringing deep habits of cultural worship to the surface, in the music that a culture has forgotten how to use to worship God. In delving into those traditions and plumbing the depths of cultural liturgies, we can reorient them around the only God who is worthy of worship.

What are cultural liturgies? — Liturgical Folk

In Desiring the Kingdom, philosopher James K. A. Smith says that to be culturally discerning we need to view and respond Christianly to our world in terms of both worldview and liturgy. Worldview analysis identifies cultural ideas, beliefs and values and then examines them in light of the ideas, beliefs and values revealed in the gospel.
